OVERVIEW

The INKEY List is a UK-based skincare brand founded in 2018 by Colette Laxton and Mark Curry. The company was created to simplify skincare and help consumers understand the ingredients used in cosmetic products and how they affect skin health (theinkeylist, n.d.).

MISSION

The INKEY List's mission is to democratize skincare by making knowledge and effective ingredients accessible to everyone. The founders created the brand to cut through confusing beauty marketing and empower consumers with ingredient education (BeautyMatter, 2026).

VISION

The INKEY List's core values focus on education, transparency, and accessibility in skincare. The brand simplifies ingredient knowledge through clear labeling and straightforward formulations. It also emphasizes inclusivity and cruelty-free practices, making effective skincare accessible to all skin types.

Who Are We Speaking To?

TARGET AUDIENCE

Skincare beginners: Consumers looking for simple routines and ingredient explanations .

Gen Z and Millennials (18–35): GenZ and Millennials (18–35) actively consume skincare content on TikTok, Instagram, and YouTube and often research ingredients before purchasing .

Ingredient conscious beauty consumers: Users who prefer science based skincare rather than luxury branding.

What differentiates Inkey List from the rest?

— inkey™ —

So, no apologies here.

Just straightforward ingredients,
clear education & routines
that make sense.

Love, The INKEY List
(who are genuinely... still not sorry)

Ingredient Transparency

The Inkey List highlights active ingredients (such as niacinamide and hyaluronic acid) directly in product names. Customers are better able to comprehend what they are putting on their skin because of this transparency.

Education Driven Marketing

The brand employs social media content, such as skincare guides and ingredient explanations, to educate customers. By establishing the company as a source of skincare information, this strategy increases authority and trust.

Consumer Co-Creation

Customers can try new product ideas and provide feedback through programs like INKEY Lab. This strengthens customer engagement and brand loyalty within the community.

Market Positioning

Affordable science-based skincare: Accessible pricing with effective ingredient-based products.

Ingredient-led and transparent formulations: Products centred around active ingredients like retinol and niacinamide.

Education-driven and beginner-friendly skincare: Simplifies skincare through clear explanations and digital education.

The INKEY List positions itself as an affordable, ingredient-focused skincare brand that simplifies skincare through education, transparency, and accessible pricing for everyday consumers.

Competitive Positioning and Market Landscape Insights

The Inkey List competes with brands such as Medik8, CeraVe, Paula's Choice, Procoal, and The Ordinary in the highly competitive ingredient-focused skincare market. While competitors like The Ordinary and Paula's Choice dominate organic search visibility and digital presence, The Inkey List positions itself by offering science-backed skincare ingredients at affordable prices and simplifying skincare for everyday consumers. The brand differentiates through clear ingredient education, beginner-friendly routines, and strong social media engagement, making skincare more accessible to younger and first-time users.

Current Issues Affecting the Brand

High Market Competition

Standing out is challenging due to fierce competition from companies like The Ordinary, CeraVe, and Paula's Choice.

Ingredient Education Gap

Many customers find skincare chemicals difficult to understand, which can lead to a dizzying array of options.

Social Media Saturation

There is intense competition for visibility because to the abundance of skincare businesses and influencers on platforms like Instagram and TikTok.

Rapidly Changing Trends

Social media viral skincare trends shift rapidly, making it difficult for manufacturers to remain relevant.

Social Media Strategy

Content Strategy Misalignment is Driving Engagement Decline

- Educational rigidity: Content locked in the Ingredient → Product → Advice cycle, causing fatigue.
- Platform-language mismatch: Clinical expert content conflicts with the edutainment logic of TikTok and Instagram.
- Performance impact: Follower growth dropped (IG -62%, TikTok -73%) and engagement per post fell from 570.75 → 261.9.

"Knowledge Collective" Strategy

- Role Incongruity: The brand currently positions celebrities and experts as "tutors" or "authorities," focusing purely on factual output rather than utilizing them as relatable companions who share a personal skin journey.
- Lack of Emotional Resonance: The strategy is excessively "Brand-centric" rather than "User-centric," failing to bridge the gap between clinical facts and the emotional needs of the community, which limits potential for viral organic spread.

Current Social Media Strategy

Strengths

- Authenticity and transparency: transparent communication concerning price, product improvements, and company value
- Community-focused engagement: encourage participation through sampling campaigns, feedback-driven product development, forming bonds within community
- Educational based content: educational content continues to be the content pillar

Opportunities

- Increase user-generated and story-driven content: encourage customers to co-create authentic and relatable content
- Engage in current internet trends: increase reach and engagement, especially among younger audiences through viral trends, challenges
- Expand influencers and expert collaborations: working with skincare/beauty influencers, dermatologists to diversify content

1. Increase Engagement and Build Community (Critical)

- Current issue: Engagement has dropped significantly (570.75 → 261.9 posts)
- Shift from clinical expert positioning to user-centric, relatable content
- Build emotional connections beyond ingredient education

2. Expand Social Media Reach Among Gen Z & Millennials (18-35)

- Primary audience is highly active on TikTok and Instagram
- Counter social media saturation in the skincare space

PRIMARY OBJECTIVES

3. Differentiate from Major Competitors

- Stand out against The Ordinary, CeraVe, Paula's Choice
- Leverage beginner-friendly approach vs. clinical competitor positioning
- Capitalize on affordability positioning while maintaining brand authority

4. Address Content Strategy Misalignment

- Move from rigid educational → product → advice cycle
- Increase story-driven, emotionally resonant content
- Emphasize ingredient transparency and consumer co-creation

What are our strategy components?

INKEY™

Feel First is built on three interlocking pillars.

Each one moves the brand closer to how people actually experience their skin.

Feel Translations

Every ingredient is assigned a short, sensory description using everyday experience; no clinical terms, just the feeling and named.

Education Driven Content

Social content, stories check-ins, and texture videos anchor INKEY as a trusted skincare guide, not a brand shouting about formulas.

Consumer Co-Creation

The Community Translation Challenge invites followers to describe their routines in feelings. INKEY reposts the best and matches them to products.

Content Creation Approach

InKey™

Texture & Sensation Videos

Macro footage of product textures paired with voiceover feel translations. No ingredient names. No percentages. Just the feeling, named.

"You Already Know This Feeling" Series

Opens with a universally relatable sensation and closes with the INKEY product that delivers that feeling to your skin.

Community Translation Challenge

UGC mechanic inviting followers to describe their skincare routine using only feelings and everyday objects. No product names allowed.

"What Does Your Skin Feel Like?" Check-ins

Recurring Instagram Stories format. Followers describe their skin — tight, sticky, thirsty, heavy — and receive a feel-translated product recommendation.

Messaging Hierarchy

Core Message Your skin already speaks in feelings. So do we.

Supporting No jargon. No guesswork. Just find your feeling.

CTA What does your skin feel like? Tell us — we'll translate it.

Where Does 'Feel First' Go Live

Sensory content thrives on TikTok. The FYP algorithm rewards niche educational content with disproportionate reach. The 18–25 core demographic is most densely concentrated on TikTok, and duet / stitch mechanics make the Community Translation Challenge natively at home.

Reels extend TikTok content with minimal extra production. Carousels present multiple feel translations in one post. The save metric signals purchase intent — educational content that people save converts at significantly higher rates. Stories run the skin check-in format.

INKEY™

Three Platforms. One Connected Campaign

Each platform plays a distinct role — from discovery and education to conversion and community.

A dedicated Feel First landing page hosts the Feel Translation dictionary — searchable, growing, matching sensations to products. Serves as a campaign asset now and an organic SEO resource long after the campaign ends, capturing high-intent searches.

Implementation Tactics

Influencer Strategy:

Macro (500k+): 2-3 creators for launch; authentic feel translations on TikTok.

Mid-tier (50k-500k): 8-10 creators; stitch/duet hero content on TikTok & Reels.

Micro (5k-50k): Organic via #FeelFirst challenge (no paid posts).

The background is a collage of various skincare products. On the left, there's a large, smiling orange face with two red dots for eyes. Below it, a blue liquid splash is visible. In the center and right, there are various skincare containers and tubes. Some labels are visible, such as 'HYALURONIC ACID', 'THE INKEY LIST', 'MOISTURIZE', and 'TREAT'. The overall aesthetic is clean and modern, with a focus on skincare ingredients and textures.

Why Feel First Works

The campaign's power is in its simplicity. The INKEY List is already trusted for ingredient honesty - 'Feel First' takes that trust and makes it tactile. Instead of teaching beginners the language of skincare, the campaign meets them in a language they already speak fluently: sensation.

This is a meaningful competitive advantage. No major skincare brand has built a campaign architecture around sensation-based translation at this level. The category defaults to education. INKEY's opportunity is to default to feeling - and in doing so, become the only brand that a skincare beginner genuinely understands on their first encounter.

The UGC mechanic, the routine builder, and the Feel Translation dictionary collectively ensure the campaign creates lasting value beyond its active period. Content, community, and conversion are built into the same structure - reducing reliance on paid media over time and compounding the brand's organic presence.
